Business description

Presumably, the method of drying grapes was discovered only as a result of a simple accident. Our ancestors are thought to have been tasting the fruits that had fallen off the trees and dried in the sun when they discovered its sweetness and good taste. Evidence shows that raisins were first produced by the Egyptians in 2,000 BC.

Raisins are specifically mentioned in ancient writings and it appears that, in addition to having been eaten as a kind of snack, they were also used to treat diseases and even to pay taxes. The share of global exports of this product is more than $2 billion. The largest exporters of this product are Turkey, USA, and Chile, which means the first share of world raisin trade is allocated to the Middle East. Middle East produces high-quality raisins thanks to fertile soil, manpower, and low fuel costs.

- Sun-dried Raisins

The oldest and least expensive way to dry grapes is the one in direct sunlight. In this method, the grapes are first washed, then placed on a tray or in a hygienic environment, and then they are placed directly under sunlight, the grapes lose their moisture and turn into raisins.

- Golden raisins

Golden raisins or yellow raisins, are obtained by drying seedless grapes, and yellow grapes used to prepare them. However, you can also make yellow raisins from green grapes. Drying grapes by the use of additives, raisins change color from green to yellow. In the drying process, the grapes are dried in the shade to protect the color of the raisins.

Of course, sometimes they use Sulfur Dioxide to enhance its color and add to its beauty.

- Sultana Raisins

Sultani Raisins are made by drying seedless green grapes. Acid solution is usually used in the drying process. For this purpose, the grapes are immersed in the solution for a certain period of time and after being taken out and drained, they are placed in the sun or in the shade. Sulfur Dioxide is also used to make the color lighter. Because of using this acidic solution, Sultani raisins are also called acidic raisins.
